FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

The “At Work Survey” Project is an employee survey to capture the state of employee engagement and attitude towards the current work environment.

New York, NY, June, 2006 – Retensa announces the launch of a brand new “At Work Survey” to address the constantly changing needs, wants, and expectations of today’s workforce. When completed the survey will keep organizations abreast of current trends by engaging employees to share their personal feelings and attitudes towards their company. Hundreds of companies and individuals crossing all industry sectors and positions will participate in an effort to capture a wide range of data to be analyzed.

The “At Work Survey” information gathered will allow HR managers, recruiters, and executives to gauge the loyalty of their current work force and make better staffing decisions. By obtaining a quick overall picture of employee engagement and employee attitude towards their current work environment companies can establish preventative measures before problems arise. An alarming 80% of employees are either actively job hunting or open to better offers from elsewhere according to February CNNMoney.com article. By promoting involvement in this survey, organizations can start to reverse this unfortunate statistic at their firm.

The “At Work Survey” Project was initiated in 2000 by employee retention research firm, Retensa. Originally launched as the “Employee Express Lane” to grasp the ideas, opinions, and thoughts of employees and create a better personal and professional experience for them. It was refined as the “At Work Survey” to provide organizations greater insight on why people are joining their company, if they are engaged in what they do, and inspired by the people they work for.

If you would like to have your company participate in the At Work Survey, simply go to www.AtWorkSurvey.org to send invitations. It will only take a few minutes and the survey is completely confidential.
